Keeping the lights on—no matter what

In this unprecedented year, we've all spent months at home, and we are grateful that businesses have reopened and that school is starting back up.

During the time spent at home, perhaps more than ever we realized how vital electricity is to our lives. In fact, many of us believe that electricity is as much of a necessity as food. What you may not know is that every time you flip a switch, turn on your TV or reach into the refrigerator, there are literally hundreds of hard-working Kentuckians making sure that the power is produced, transmitted and delivered to you around the clock.

We have 41 employees. After the pandemic hit, they have worked for months on staggered shifts. Our customer service representatives have worked with consumer-members who are struggling financially to help get them back on their feet. Dispatchers coordinated operations, while line-workers did their jobs in hot, cold and rainy weather.

I thank them all from the bottom of my heart for their dedication to providing the highest quality service under difficult conditions.

Our focus has never changed: to keep the lights on, to keep people safe and to work with members to get through hard times. We know there are major hardships now and that many people have lost jobs or wages.

Our lives have changed, and may be different in the months ahead. We've seen months where people have not been able to hold weddings, attend funerals or go to church. It's taken a toll on us but, by working together, I believe we are going to overcome the challenges from the coronavirus.

The good news is that we at Shelby Energy Cooperative are going to adapt and deal with whatever comes. We will continue to do everything possible to keep you safe and to keep the lights on. We will get through these times by standing together, on rock-solid ground.

Your Safety Matters

Kitchen safety prevents fire and injury

The kitchen is the heart of the home, but taking the proper safety precautions is essential to prevent electric shock, fires and injuries.

Without taking the right steps, appliances can pose a risk of electrocution. For example, never use a metal utensil when removing jammed bread from the toaster unless you first unplug the toast.

If attempting to retrieve a utensil or item from the garbage disposal, be safe by unplugging it or by shutting off the breaker. When cooking, be attentive and do not leave appliances unattended. Over half of house fires start in the kitchen. You should have a Class ABC fire extinguisher readily accessible that is capable of putting out fires caused by grease or hot oils igniting. Don't place an extinguisher in a place that is hard to reach or stack items in front of it. Reaction time is crucial. If a fire ignites in the oven, leave the door closed, turn the heat source off and call 911 if necessary.

The kitchen should be equipped with the ground fault circuit interrupters (GFCIs) for all counter-top appliances. The GFCI acts as a circuit breaker to prevent overload and fire. Test GFCIs every month to ensure they are in working order. Shelby Energy Cooperative wants you to be safe in the kitchen.
